Breakfast Republic Wonderland

San Diego's North Park neighborhood has hatched a one-of-a-kind breakfast destination that is ruffling feathers with its sidesplitting attention to detail. Using an avant-garde approach to décor, Breakfast Republic is a pun-filled wonderland that will feed your readers' appetite for eccentric design.

From the moment customers walk in, Breakfast Republic has them laughing with out-of-the-box interiors that are painfully funny. All who approach the eatery are greeted by the deadly stare of Christopher Walken in a portrait that reads, "No Reservations... Walkens Only." Once inside, the first thing to break guests out of their shells is the vibrant living wall with oversized bright red letters spelling, "RUN COCK RUN."

The unconventional design doesn't stop there! Their ceiling fans are made of rotating Einstein lights in the shape of kitchen whisks to keep the focus on everything breakfast. The mirrors in the bathrooms are custom-designed to look like over-sized sunglasses, and the phrase "You look fine," stares back at guests as they check their appearance. Early-bird diners can enjoy their eggs sunny side up on Breakfast Republic's outside patio, laden with electric yellow chairs and light-hearted cartoons of chickens escaping from the coop.

From wise quotes spray painted on the walls to clever sayings posted on tabletops and coffee cups, Breakfast Republic's attention to detail is certainly something to crow about. Each table's napkin holder features cheeky phrases such as, "A yawn is a silent scream for coffee," and "Common sense is a flower that doesn't grow in everyone's garden." In an eggshell, the entire experience has guests clucking from beginning to end, especially when their check comes wedged in a fork demanding them to "Fork it over."
